Abstract: This study aims to investigate the impact of digital marketing on the sales performance of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in the retail sector. The research focuses on the adoption and usage of digital marketing strategies, such as social media, email marketing, and search engine optimization (SEO), and their relationship to sales growth and customer engagement. Data is collected from a sample of 100 SMEs through a survey questionnaire. The findings indicate that digital marketing adoption is positively correlated with sales performance, with social media and email marketing showing the strongest impact. The study also identifies factors influencing the adoption of digital marketing, such as business size, owner's digital literacy, and access to resources. The results suggest that SMEs should invest in digital marketing to enhance their sales performance and competitiveness in the market.

For example, the study found that the use of a single, standardized questionnaire to assess the prevalence of mental health problems in the community is not sufficient. The study also found that the use of a single, standardized questionnaire to assess the prevalence of mental health problems in the community is not sufficient.
