Antiquary Vol 16 Classic Reprint:

The Antiquary, Vol. 16 (Classic Reprint) ,2015-06-29 Excerpt from The Antiquary Vol 16 The object of these papers is to give a brief outline of some of the work performed by the artisans of the two great classes of labourers falling under the heads of the smith and the Wright Of course it is impossible in the brief space allowed to a paper in the columns of the Antiquary for me to give an entire history of arts and manufactures in the Anglo Saxon time My object is rather to call attention to the subject than to exhaust it The two words smith and wright are very thoroughly English They are common to all the languages of the Germanic group but we find the best key to their actual meaning in Icelandic the actual parent of the Scandinavian branch of that group to which ours more especially belongs In Icelandic the substantive smith means a maker of anything in the senses of our expressions builder constructor smith and wright The verb smitha has special reference to building while the verb verka our work wrought wrought had a higher signification referring to the results produced by the mind or soul rather than the productions of the hand Thus the poems of a scald the victories of a champion were his works while the objects resulting from the labours of the carpenter were smithied In England the difference between the two expressions soon assumed the dimensions with which we are familiar at the present day the smith being regarded as a worker in Vol XVI metal and the wright or worker as a labourer in other materials though the carpenter was often called a smith A remnant of the old feeling however is sometimes found in the earlier remains where the poet is called the verse smith while in the names Cartwright Wheelwright etc evidences of early functions are preserved The comprehensive meaning of these two terms explains their widespread employment as family names Smith being perhaps the one most frequently met with amongst us Let us consider some of the results of the smith s art in the English sense of his name And first as our splendid ancestors were fighting men all through their Valhalla contained a smith but a very different kind of deity to the Vulcan of the South He forged the weapons of the warrior gods it is true but his private life was far more respectable than that of the limping lout who forged the bolts of Jove Of course amongst warriors arms and armour were the first requisites and consequently we find Volund weaving the war net in other words a smith forging the rings and rivets for the chain mail of the champions The name Voland lives amongst us in Wayland Smith at the present day thus although the war net is no more its skilled contriver survives his work Chain mail is a child of Asiatic origin far more ancient than the boiled leather corium or cuirasse of the Romans It does not appear to have been used by the Romans though largely employed by the barbarians ourselves among the rest The rings were of proof as we learn in Beowulf where the sea monster can make no impression on the hero s mail and the connection of the combined rings producing an harmonious whole of extreme strength and great power of resistance was in very early times recognised as forming something analogous to the verses of the scald the linked sweetness long drawn out of a later bard Nor is the analogy between the Byrnie or coat of mail and the poem merely a fanciful conceit About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books
