Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Haifeng Chen, Yihong Liu, 2013-09-05 Teeth are vital organs of vertebrates of which the main function is to bite and chew food into pieces Human teeth are always an essential concern in appearance and beauty and they play an important role in everything from word pronunciation to the protection of support organs The right anatomical shape and arrangement of teeth are the basis for these functions Each tooth contains three hard calcified tissues including enamel dentin and cementum and one soft tissue pulp which contains blood vessels nerves and is connected with the periodontal tissue by a narrow root canal The development formation composition microstructure optical and mechanical properties and common defects of and damages to human teeth are reviewed in this chapter This knowledge is of importance in restorative dentistry for designing preventive treatments to maintain tissue integrity and to replace damaged tissues with synthetic materials e g ceramics which mimic the natural appearance and performance of teeth Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry James Shen, 2013-09-05 The growth of implant and fixed prosthodontics practices in dentistry has created a rapidly increasing demand for advanced ceramics and ceramic processes Innovations in ceramics and ceramic processes are vital to ensure reliable and affordable dental restoration solutions with aesthetically pleasing outcomes The work aims to engage the bioceramics and engineering communities to meet the challenges of modern dental restoration using advanced ceramics Incorporating fundamental science advanced engineering concepts and clinical outcomes the work is suitable for bioceramicists ceramics manufacturers dental clinicians and biologists State of the art coverage encompasses bioresorbable ceramics for bone regeneration and bioactivating surfaces of inert high strength ceramics for implantation keeping research knowledge appropriately updated Discusses transition from the baseline stable and physically stiff ceramics research into engineering of highly coherent laminate composites for prosthetic crowns and bridges Showcases current feasible techniques for producing in cost effective and materials saving ways long lasting individualized ceramic components with biocompatibility complexity and high precision Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Jing Zhao, Xinzhi Wang, 2013-09-05 Tooth defects and missing teeth are common oral diseases that threaten the patient s health aesthetics and self confidence Prosthodontics is a dental specialty with a long history of providing artificial prostheses to restore or replace the damaged or missing teeth and dentition of patients Based on type and degree there are three main categories of tooth damage tooth defect partial edentulism and complete edentulism Various prosthetic treatments are available for restoration and each of them has its specific advantages and limitations This means thect the patient s oral and general health condition and the individual s expectation In thiat the decision to pursue prosthetic treatment should be made by fully understanding the characteristics of the defs chapter background knowledge of the characteristics of tooth defects and edentulism are introduced in combination with commonly used prostheses Despite the fact that there are no omnipotent prostheses some general guidelines of prostheses selection are given Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Peter Schüpbach, 2013-09-05

Titanium based dental implants and abutments exhibit excellent biocompatibility and mechanical properties Both early wound healing and bone formation and soft tissue healing towards abutments are well understood This chapter elucidates whether ceramic surfaces provide appropriate conditions for soft and hard tissue healing

Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Belinda Reinhardt, Thomas Beikler, 2013-09-05 Titanium and titanium alloys are considered standard materials for dental implants with very well documented high rates of success and survival Potential immunologic and aesthetic drawbacks associated with titanium implants have resulted in the development of alternatives like zirconia based dental implants Zirconia seems to be a suitable implant material because of its tooth like color mechanical properties biocompatibility and low plaque affinity However the use of zirconia in clinical implant dentistry is still controversial The aim of this chapter is to review clinical and research articles conducted on zirconia dental implants and to provide information on zirconia dental implant osseointegration mechanical strength and microbiology Compared to titanium based dental implants zirconia implants show promising results in clinical studies However there are a limited number of long term studies on the outcome of zirconia implants and additional clinical research needs to be done to fully appraise zirconia based dental implants

Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Simon Jegou Saint-Jean, 2013-09-05 Feldspathic porcelains leucite and lithium disilicate glass ceramics are important materials used in restorative dentistry for their biocompatibility excellent aesthetic properties good mechanical strength and relative ease of use As a general rule in clinical practice the choice of material should be dictated by the specific clinical situation It depends on the space available to build the aesthetic and functional restoration but also on the nature of the underlying tooth or restorative structure The best aesthetic results are obtained with feldspathic porcelain restorations directly resin bonded to the tooth whereas the best function is obtained with the stronger and tougher fully anatomical or veneered glass ceramic crowns and bridges The main limitation with these ceramics is their insufficient strength for use as posterior crowns and bridges Possible means to obtain aesthetically pleasing and long term performing posterior restorations are the development of stronger glass ceramics the use of translucent colored zirconia or the use of the new class of more elastic hybrid polymer ceramic materials

Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Dag Henrik Bergsjö, Matts Andersson, Rikard Söderberg, Johan Carlson, 2013-09-05 In the early 1980s the industrialization of products based on the osseointegration principle discovered by Professor Per Ingvar Brånemark started The industrialization system has since gone through digitalization and automation where now computer aided implant design and milling are standard features of a highly flexible production process for customized products Lab production and central production are two ways of producing dental products The central production principle offers the potential for better economy of scale and turnover of products and the local dental lab can offer a higher degree of customization and personal service Quality of dental products has always been of central importance and continues to grow New technology and a highly digital treatment process are open for even better quality by the use of production simulations and tolerance analysis in all parts of the manufacturing process Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Yihong Liu,James Zhijian Shen,2013-09-05 Fractographic analysis is a useful tool for finding fracture origins that is necessary for improving the reliability of ceramic restorations The general analysis begins with the determination of fracture patterns and origins The crack propagation markings found by examination of fracture surfaces allow one to follow crack paths and to trace back to an origin including fracture mirror hackle Wallner line arrest line and compression curl This method is introduced and applied to define the origins of common clinical failures of ceramic dental prostheses They are classified as several major types namely cracking initiated at the margin or at occlusal contacts and porcelain chipping or delamination The fracture origin is always found near the spot where the highest tensile stress concentration accumulates and or microscopic defects or flaws are located nearby The fracture of ceramic dental restorations may initiate at micro defects in the porcelain or ceramic body that are introduced during the materials fabrication process or after clinical adjustment Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry Tanja Lube,Robert Danzer,2013-09-05 Ceramic materials are frequently and increasingly used in dentistry However they are very brittle the tensile strength has a large scatter and their total fracture strain is very low The strength depends on the loaded volume and on time under load These properties cause special needs with respect to design manufacturing tolerances and handling in production as well as in application In ceramics strength is limited by small flaws that are either caused by the processing of the material or by the machining of surfaces of specimens and components This chapter introduces the principles of linear elastic fracture mechanics as the basis for understanding brittle fracture and then presents fracture statistics These topics are followed by an example for designing with ceramics In subsequent sections several other damage mechanisms and their relevance in dental applications will be discussed The chapter closes with sections that deal with mechanical testing of ceramics and fractography Advanced Ceramics for Dentistry James Zhijian Shen,Tomaž Kosmač,2013-09-05 Ceramic materials are currently applied to two categories of restorative dentistry as all ceramic fixed partial dentures and as implantable components While the former demands mainly integrated and balanced properties of mechanical and aesthetic origins the latter also relies strongly on the material s bio oriented properties This chapter discusses the material demands for solving the problems encountered in current practice that indicate the direction for future developments This is done by bearing in mind both process restrictions and compatibilities Focus is placed on developing materials that have the potential for improving aesthetics for preserving a healthy situation to secure a prolonged treatment survival and for improving the durability and reliability of the restorations while also simplifying the procedures of materials manufacture and clinical operation Biomimetic materials and processes related to them are topics of general importance from a long perspective
