

ADOLESCENT PSYCHOLOGY: FINAL STUDY GUIDE

Families

Family Processes

- Reciprocal Socialization and the Family as a System
 - Reciprocal socialization: the process by which children and adolescents socialize parents, just as parents socialize them
 - When the behavior of one family member changes, it can influence the behavior of other family members
 - Happily, married parents are more sensitive, responsive, warm, and affectionate toward their children and adolescents
 - A positive family climate for adolescents involves not only effective parenting but also a positive relationship between parents, whether they are married or divorced
- Maturation
 - Physical, cognitive, and socioemotional changes in the adolescent can influence parent-adolescent relationships
 - Conflict between parents and adolescents, especially between mothers and sons, is the most stressful during the apex of pubertal growth
 - Early maturing adolescents experience more conflict with their parents than do adolescents who mature late or on time
 - With increased logical skills, adolescents want to know—often in detail—why they are being disciplined
 - The adolescent's increasingly idealistic thought comes into play in parent-adolescent relationships
 - Preadolescent children are often compliant and easy to manage
 - As they enter puberty, children begin to question or seek rationales for parental demands
 - Adolescents spend more time with peers than when they were children, and they begin to push more strongly for independence

Adolescents' and Emerging Adults' Relationships with Their Parents

- Parents as Managers
 - Parents can serve as regulators of opportunities for the adolescents' social contact with peers, friends, and adults
 - Family-management practices are positively related to students' grades and self-responsibility and negatively to school-related problems
 - One of the most important family-management practices is maintaining a structured and organized family environment
 - Key aspect of the managerial role of parenting is effective monitoring, which is especially important as children move into the adolescent years
 - Lower adolescent disclosure to parents was linked to antisocial behavior, while greater disclosure is linked to positive adolescent adjustment
 - Adolescents' willingness to disclose information to parents also is related to responsive parenting and a higher level of parental behavioral control, which are components of a positive parenting style
- Parenting Styles
 - Diana Baumrind's emphasis on four styles of parents associated with different aspects of adolescents' social behavior:
 - Authoritarian parenting: a restrictive, punitive style
 - Authoritative parenting: a style in which parents encourage adolescents to be independent but still place limits and controls on their actions
 - Neglectful parenting: a style in which the parent is very uninvolved in the adolescent's life
 - Indulgent parenting: a style in which parents are highly involved with their adolescents but place few demands or controls on them
 - In general, researchers have found authoritative parenting to be related to positive aspects of development
