There is a close link between the images above. Each is home to a variety of plants and species, but no two are the same. Although they're all habitable to life, these biomes have quite a lot of differences too. Many of these differences are abiotic, or non-living. They include the amount of sunlight, the amount of oxygen in the air or water, and the kind of soil present.

infer, or make your best guess, about some of the abiotic factors in each of the images:

Location	Temperature	Amount of rainfall

Similarly, these locations are all home to many skottle, or living, factions as well.

What kinds of species do you think live in each of these places? Feel free to use any of the species in the Species list, or even make up your own!

Location	Species Living There

Lastly, the chaparral biome is a coastal biome with hot, dry summers and mild winters. It has mostly shrubs with a few short trees. Deer, birds, and rabbits live in the chaparral.

Chaparral

Take a look at the map below to get a feel for the position and sizes of our global zones. Remember that the largest bloom of all, the main bloom, is not used on this map. You will use the information presented here to answer questions on the following pages.

The Sahara Desert in Africa is the largest hot desert, but Antarctica is the largest desert in the world! It's cold there, but there is so little rain (or snow) that it's still considered a desert. The animals that survive in the desert have adapted in many ways. Many develop unique ways of surviving such as water storage... or the ability to remain dormant (similar to hibernation) for a long

There are several different kinds of forest biomes, including:

- Tropical rainforest – The warmest and most humid of all biomes. The rainfall forest is most likely the most famous forest. This lush habitat stays warm and wet all year long. Yearly rainfall can average up to 7000 cm (400 inches)! Rainforest are home to a wide variety of plants and animals, as food is nearly always found in this abundant ecosystem. Here you can find parrots, sloths, and monkeys.

Earth is an amazing planet. It has many different environments that make perfect homes for millions of species. The largest major habitats that exist worldwide are known as biomes. Most likely, you're already familiar with many of these: desert, rainforest, grassland, etc. Each biome is unique and therefore essential to sustaining the life that calls it home. Conservation of all habitats is crucial for maintaining the variety of life that makes our Earth so abundant in wonder and natural resources.

How many biomes are there? Do all water environments constitute a single aquatic biome? Are all trees and associated organisms a forest biome? The number of biomes you split the world into simply depends on how specific you'd like to be. Let's take a look at some of the largest biomes, and the abiotic and biotic factors that define them.
