It is important to note that the results of this study are preliminary and need to be confirmed by future research. The study has several limitations, including the small sample size and the lack of control over the variables. The study also has several strengths, including the use of a mixed-methods approach and the inclusion of both qualitative and quantitative data. The study's findings have several implications for practice and policy. The results suggest that there is a need for more research on the factors that influence the adoption of digital technologies in education. The results also suggest that there is a need for more training and support for teachers in the use of digital technologies. Finally, the results suggest that there is a need for more research on the impact of digital technologies on student learning outcomes.

The Program's affirming thought has profound New-Age-like roots. It was lifted from practitioners and works of occultic-oriental literature, including alchemical texts, which were re-shaped into flags of ideological battle in a rebranding of psychic allegories. Each movement incorporated a substantial amount of imagery and a recombination of principles from Theosophical occultic esotericism, to e.g., a 1910s occultist from Sweden used a term to describe a "reborn" mantric focus: "magical-occultism" (magisch-occultismus) as part of a related (if not overlapping) methodology suggested for a year in a 1910s occultist's mailing notes to students from a New Zealand to be a "a new occultism" (occultisme) to be a "new occultism" (occultisme).
