

Field Laboratory

Activity 1: Part 1

1. Relationships between soil texture, permeability, determining water holding capacity.

Field water permeability measurements involve field measurements of water flow through the particles that allow the water to move down. When water is poured evenly, gradually, the holding capacity (water holding capacity) of the soil will be the amount of water that is held by the water holding capacity of the soil.

Field water holding capacity of the soil will be determined by the water holding capacity of the particles and the water holding capacity of the particles.
