The flowchart illustrates the Incident Management Process, starting with a user contacting the service desk or a specialist submitting a request form. The process flows through registration and assignment, then to a decision on whether change management is required. If yes, it goes to change management; if no, it proceeds to tracking and resolution by a specialist. From resolution, it can go to problem management or an escalation decision. If escalation is required, it goes to escalation handling, then to a decision on the most efficient recovery site. Depending on this decision, it may go back to change management or to closure. Finally, closure leads to solution approval, with inputs from change, release, and continuity management.
