2.4 Product overview

HydroPower Ignition is exclusive to Bosch - it does not require a 240V power supply.

- HydroPower uses the energy created by the water flow to ignite the burner and begin the heating process. The unit only starts when a hot water tap is opened. Once the tap is turned off, the unit turns off.

2.5 Description of the Hot Water Unit

- Hot Water Unit for external wall-mounting only
- Available in Natural gas or LP gas
- Hydrogenerator produces sufficient energy to ignite and control the heater
 - Water enters the Hydrogenerator
 - The turbine spins with water flow
 - A voltage is generated by the turbine
 - This voltage causes the ignition control unit to light a temporary pilot
 - The water pressure opens the main burner gas valve and the pilot ignites the main burner, the pilot then goes out
 - The water flows through the heat exchanger where it is heated
- Safety devices:
 - Flame rod to check for accidental extinction of the burner flame
 - Overtemperature switch to prevent overheating.
- Water filter on the inlet water supply

Economical

Only heating water when required, the Bosch range is extremely economical to run.

Versatile

LPG models are particularly popular in country areas, where Natural Gas is not available.

Low Temperature Areas

In areas where the atmospheric temperature may drop to 0 °C for brief periods, the installation of an EXOGEL valve (part number H707 060 151) will minimise the possibility of damage to the appliance if the water freezes.

NOTICE:

This water heater MUST NOT be installed in areas where the temperature remains below 0 °C for extended periods.

Low Flow Rates

This gas water heater is designed to operate at a minimum flow rate between 3.2 to 4.0 litres per minute. Minimum water supply pressure must meet the requirements set out in table 5. Sufficient flow must be provided to ensure the correct operation of the appliance.

There are various causes of a low flow rate including, but not limited to:

- Low flow tapware
- Flow restrictors/aerators
- Hand held showers
- Poor inlet pressure to property
- Restrictive pipework and/or fittings

Water fixtures and appliance settings must ensure that the flow rate of hot water does not fall below the minimum requirement.

Failure of the unit to operate correctly due to poor flow rate will not be covered by warranty.
