Rhodos Smyrna fought a war of words over Homer's birthplace Each claimed the honour And if indeed such an accident of chance confers an honour upon a town then the birthplace of the Greatest Poet of all time should be a place of pilgrimage 7 Of the two imperishable monuments Homer has left us the decision of critical scholarship has placed the Iliad first It has been said that the Iliad is like the midday the Odyssey like the setting sun Both are of equal splendour though the latter has lost its noonday heat But I would take that adroit simile and draw another meaning from it A fine poet a great player are to give us an Ulysses who must perforce be not only full of the spirit of his own age of myth but instinct with the spirit of this That is as inevitable as it is interesting The Gentle Elia how one wishes one could find a better name for him but custom makes cowards of us all has written his own version of the Odyssey I cannot emulate that But I think I can at least be useful C
