Autoethnography Rewriting The Self And The Social Explorations In Anthropology:

Auto/ethnography Deborah Reed-Danahay, 2021-01-07 In departing from the traditional stance taken by anthropologists who study others ethnographically this timely book explores forms of self inscription on the part of both the ethnographer and those others who are studied Informed by developments in postmodernism postcolonialism and feminism this is an original contribution to the growing dialogue across disciplinary boundaries The chapters build upon recent reconsiderations of the uses and meaning of personal narrative to examine the ways in which selves and social forms are culturally constituted through biographical genres Ethnic autobiography self reflexivity in ethnography and native ethnography raise provocative questions about a range of issues for the contemporary scholar authenticity of voice ethnographic authority and the degree to which autoethnography constitutes resistance to hegemonic bodies of discourse Examined here in a variety of cultural and political contexts writing about the self offers challenging insights into the construction and transformation of identities and cultural meanings

Autoethnography Deborah Reed-Danahay, 2020 Autoethnography places the self within a social and cultural context It is not primarily about the self however and in this it differs from autobiography This entry adopts a broad view of autoethnography with attention to different approaches and applications of this term Although its first uses appeared in mid 20th century writings the concept of autoethnography has been increasingly invoked in a variety of social science and humanities disciplines since the 1990s The history of the uses of this term is traced from its original uses in the context of anthropological research among non Western and small scale societies when it referred to the ethnographic perspectives on their own cultures by those studied by anthropologists to more recent approaches that interrogate the researcher's own life experiences in and out of the field For some who use the term it is primarily about forms of self ethnography but for others it is about ethnographic reflections upon one's own group Emphasis can be placed therefore more on the self or the social Autoethnography raises questions about the insider outsider dichotomy and the construction of the objective observer Various genres of autoethnographic writing are discussed as well as its applications in illness and migration narratives The entry ends with attention to critiques ethical concerns and emerging areas for further applications women's leadership in multiple ways and in multiple contexts. Theorizing has been viewed as a gendered activity (Swedberg 2014) and this series of chapters seeks to upend that imbalance. The chapters are written by women who represent multiple disciplines, cultures, races, and subject positions. The diversity extends into research paradigm and method, and the chapters combine to illuminate the multiple ways of knowing about and being a woman leader. Twenty-first century leadership scholars acknowledge the importance of context, and many are considering post-heroic leadership models based on relationships rather than traits. This volume contributes to this discussion by offering a diverse array of perspectives and ways of knowing about leadership and leading. The purpose of the volume is to provide readers with not only interesting new ideas about women and leadership but also to highlight the diverse epistemologies that can contribute to theorizing about women leaders. Some chapters represent typical social scientific practices and processes, while others represent newer knowledge forms and ways of knowing. The volume contributors adopt various epistemological positions ranging from objective researcher to embedded co-participant. The chapters link their new findings to existing empirical or conceptual work and illustrate how the findings extend, amend, contradict, or confirm existing research. The diversity of the chapters is one of the volume's strengths because it illuminates the multiple ways that leadership theory for women can be advanced. Typically, research based on a realist perspective is more valued in the academy. This perspective has indeed generated robust information about leadership in general and women's leadership in particular. However, readers of this volume are offered an opportunity to explore multiple ways of knowing, different ways of researching, and are invited to de-center researcher objectivity. The authors of the chapters offer conceptual and empirical findings, illuminate multiple and alternative research practices, and in the end suggest future directions for quantitative, qualitative, and mixed methods research.

The Subcultural Imagination (Shane Blackman, Michelle Kempson, 2016-06-17) discusses young adults in subcultures and examines how sociologists use qualitative research methods to study them. Through the application of the ideas of C. Wright Mills to the development of theory, reflexive ethnography, this book analyses the experiences of young people in different subcultural settings as well as reflecting on how young people in subcultures interact in the wider context of society, biography, and history. From Cuba to London and Bulgaria to Asia, this book delves into urban spaces and street corners, young people's parties, gigs, BDSM fetish clubs, school, the home, and feminist zines to offer a picture of live sociology in practice. In three parts, the volume explores history, biography, and subculture; practising reflexivity in the field; epistemologies, pedagogies, and the subcultural subject. The book offers cutting-edge theory and rich empirical research on social class, gender, and ethnicities from both established and new researchers across diverse disciplinary backgrounds. It moves the subcultural debate beyond the impasse of the term's relevance to one where researchers are fully engaged with the lives of the subcultural subjects. This innovative edited collection will appeal to scholars and students in the areas of sociology, youth studies, media and cultural studies, communication research, methods, and ethnography, popular music studies, criminology, politics, social and cultural
