Giant Sclerosing Hepatic Hemangioma Presenting as Bornman-Terblanche-Blumgart Syndrome: a Case Report and Review of the Literature

Arwa H. Ibrahim¹, Dhuha N. Boumarah¹, Arwa A. AlGhamdi², Shadi A. Alshammary^{1,2}

ABSTRACT

Background: Hepatic hemangioma represents the most frequent benign tumor originating from the liver. When the tumor exceeds 10 cm, and in some studies 4 or 5 cm, it is considered giant, which accounts for 10% of all hemangiomas arising from the liver. Histologically, Sclerosing hepatic hemangioma, in particular, is an exceedingly rare subtype of hemangioma. Clinically Bornman-Terblanche-Blumgart syndrome is a very rare complication of hepatic hemangioma. Objective: The aim of this case presentation was to contribute to the literature by documenting a case of giant sclerosing hemangioma diagnosed in a 36-year-old female presenting with Bornman-Terblanche-Blumgart syndrome, along with a brief review of the literature. Case report: The current paper documents two rare clinical and histological features of hepatic hemangioma. Bornman-Terblanche-Blumgart syndrome is complicated a giant hepatic hemangioma found histologically to be sclerosing in nature. Knowledge about the uncommon complications of liver hemangioma permits the implementation of appropriate interventions in a timely manner and, in turn, can enhance the patient's quality of life and minimize rates of associated mortality.

Keywords: Giant Sclerosing Hepatic Hemangioma.

1. BACKGROUND

Hepatic hemangioma represents the most frequent benign tumor originating from the liver. It is formed by clusters of vascular malformations and drives its blood supply from the hepatic artery (1, 2). The prevalence of liver hemangioma has been estimated to reach 20% in autopsy studies (3). When the tumor exceeds 10 cm, and in some studies 4 or 5 cm, it is considered giant, accounting for 10% of all hemangiomas arising from the liver (2, 4, 5). These lesions are usually asymptomatic and present in a solitary pattern (5). Sclerosing hepatic hemangioma, in particular, is an exceedingly rare subtype of hemangioma characterized by the presence of degenerative changes histologically (6). To date, few reports have been published to comprehensively address the clinical features of this uncommon condition.

Bornman-Terblanche-Blumgart syndrome, a triad of abdominal pain and fever with unremarkable laboratory values, is a rare complication of hepatic hemangioma. These syndromic clinical features are recognized as a valid indicator of an ongoing inflammatory process within the hemangioma cavity (7). Although rare, the entity remains clinically significant as it possesses several diagnostic challenges and mandates surgical intervention (8). Herein, we contribute to the literature by documenting a case of giant sclerosing hemangioma diagnosed in a 36-year-old female presenting with Bornman-Terblanche-Blumgart syndrome, along with a brief review of the literature.

2. OBJECTIVE

The aim of this case presentation was to contribute to the literature by documenting a case of giant sclerosing hemangioma diagnosed in a 36-year-old female presenting with Bornman-Terblanche-Blumgart syndrome, along with a brief review of the literature. The present case was reported in accordance with the SCARE guidelines (9).

Comparison of the modified Blumgart mattress vs.

interrupted suture pancreaticojejunostomy in minimally invasive pancreaticoduodenectomy Sung Hoon

Choi, Kristine Kuchta, Pierce Paterakos, Aram Rojas, Syed Abbas Mehdi, Mark S. Talamonti, Melissa E. Hogg, 2023-08-09 Aim

The modified Blumgart mattress BM and conventional interrupted suture IS methods are currently the most widely adopted pancreaticojejunostomy PJ techniques utilized during minimally invasive pancreaticoduodenectomy MIPD. This study aimed to evaluate the postoperative outcomes between the two PJ techniques using robotic and laparoscopic approaches. Methods: This was a retrospective study involving patients who underwent robotic or laparoscopic pancreaticoduodenectomy. PD performed by two surgeons from two institutions. Surgical outcomes of the patients were compared according to the PJ techniques of robotic BM, Rob BM, robotic IS, Rob IS, and laparoscopic IS, Lap IS, which were further analyzed among patients who had a soft pancreas and small pancreatic duct while those with pancreatic ductal adenocarcinoma were excluded from the study. Results: A total of 230 patients underwent MIPD with 63 Rob BM, 48 Rob IS, and 119 Lap IS for PJ. Within the study population, clinically relevant postoperative pancreatic fistula (CR POPF) rates were comparable between Rob BM and Rob IS (6.3% vs 10.4%, $P = 0.283$) and between Rob IS and Lap IS (10.4% vs 7.6%, $P = 0.661$). Comparing patients with soft pancreas and small pancreatic duct, CR POPF rates were not statistically different among the groups (16.0% Rob BM vs 10.5% Rob IS, $P = 0.055$ and 10.5% Rob IS vs 10.1% Lap IS, $P = 0.543$). In the multivariable analysis, for risk factors of POPF, soft pancreatic texture and periampullary pathology other than pancreatic cancer were found to be risk factors. Conclusion: POPF rates after MIPD were not different according to the PJ methods of BM and IS when performed by skilled surgeons.
