Two line drawings of a fish species. The top drawing is a lateral view, showing the fish's profile with its elongated body, dorsal fin, and tail. The bottom drawing is a dorsal view, showing the fish from above, highlighting the shape of the dorsal fin and the arrangement of scales. Both drawings are detailed, showing fins, scales, and facial features.

Abstract: Studies on the influence of organizational characteristics on organizational performance have been largely inconclusive. However, the relationship between organizational characteristics and performance is complex and multifaceted. This paper aims to explore the relationship between organizational characteristics and performance by using a meta-analysis approach. The results show that organizational characteristics have a positive effect on performance, but the effect size is small. The results also show that the relationship between organizational characteristics and performance is moderated by several factors, including the type of organizational characteristic, the type of performance measure, and the type of industry. The findings suggest that organizational characteristics can be used to improve performance, but the effect is small and may be moderated by other factors.
