No Hope Jennifer Shavers, 2015-08-07 In my last period class I sat staring at the clock as if I had mind control over it Its as if time came to a grinding halt Finally the clocks hand clicked onto the appropriate hour and the bell rang signaling the day was over I got home and waited outside on the steps for my mother to come home from work I needed encouragement I needed a hug I needed to tell her what happened The car pulled into the carport as the sun was setting I thought finally she has arrived I hopped off the steps and trotted over to her As she walked toward me I noticed her arms were folded over her chest and there was a scorned look on her face that read she was in no mood to deal with my petty issues Whenever my mother arrived home she would leave the car door or trunk open if there were items to be carried into the house I spoke as I ran pass her to grab the bags Partially out of breath I described the details of my day as I kept in stride with her fast paced walk My mom told me to stop feeling sorry for myself as she emptied the bag of groceries onto the kitchen counter She continued to say there are a lot of kids out there that dont have half the benefits I did Children in Africa would kill to have a roof over their head and food on their plate How would you know what the children in Africa wanted I thought in my head I failed to see the relevance It was as if someone ignited a fire or flipped a switch inside me My very soul was being consumed with anger Flames of self loathing burned inside my belly and my stomach ached badly Deep down I knew it wouldnt be okay ever and my existence seemed ridiculous now Waves of regret and sorrow crashed down on me all at once My mothers comment turned the seething embers of hopelessness into full fledged flames I retreated to my bedroom to scrawl these intense thoughts in my diary that does not judge or disappoint

Between 2 Gods: A Memoir of Abuse in the Mennonite Community Trudy Metzger, 2015-03-03 The mountains rise tall and majestic stretching into the skies and gracing the heavens that place where God dwells I pause from my play a young preschooler to take in the breathtaking view and wonder if I would be closer to God if I were at the top of that mountain I feel Him in the breezes see His angels in the raindrops as they dance in the puddles At least that is how I imagine it My heart is captivated and I want to know Him this God who paints the beautiful sunrise and draws the curtains of sunset I hear murmurings that my father has threatened to kill us his family He flies into a rage cursing disobedience declaring damnation on the offender He offers religion without relationship and it seems that the church affirms this teaching These two Gods the one revealed in nature who makes beautiful things and whispers in the breeze and the angry god who threatens yells and abuses collide head on in my mind soul and spirit I am confused and troubled I pray to God I ignore Him I reach for Him I shut Him out I cry in desperation I scream against Him inwardly I long to be held and loved by Him I cringe I fear I flee And always my heart wonders Which God is real Which one is safe Which one will ultimately save me Which one will condemn My soul is tormented in the night as the shadows dance on the walls of my room I am seven I am lost I lie awake afraid wondering I am thirteen the shadows still strike fear the creaking stairs terrorize my mind nightmares torment my sleep I have tried the God of wrath and He has left me condemned and lonely I am abused neglected and alone I shut down become numb and feel nothing I am determined that I will not suffer forever the God of my childhood is lost in the pain and trauma of abuse and I am left to struggle caught in a tug of war Between 2 Gods
