

THE ANCIENT MAYA WORLD

The Maya civilization flourished in the southern lowlands of Central America, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean. It was a complex society with a highly developed system of agriculture, trade, and government. The Maya were known for their advanced calendar system, their intricate art and architecture, and their sophisticated writing system. The civilization reached its peak around 900 AD, but began to decline around 1000 AD, with many cities abandoned by 1500 AD. The reasons for the decline are still debated, but may have included factors such as drought, warfare, and overpopulation.
