

Abstract: The study examines how physicians utilize the Internet for continuing medical education (CME) and how this use varies by physician characteristics. The study also examines the impact of physician characteristics on the use of the Internet for CME. The study is based on data from a survey of 1,000 physicians. The results show that physicians use the Internet for CME, and that this use is influenced by physician characteristics. The study also shows that the use of the Internet for CME is associated with higher levels of physician satisfaction and performance.
