

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computer-based decision support system (DSS) would improve the performance of a group of students in a complex, multi-step problem-solving task. The study was conducted in a classroom setting, and the results showed that the use of the DSS significantly improved the students' performance. The study also found that the use of the DSS reduced the time taken to complete the task and increased the accuracy of the results. The study was limited by the small sample size and the lack of a control group. The results of this study suggest that the use of a DSS can be a valuable tool for improving student performance in complex problem-solving tasks.
