

Bar. The park is comprised of 413 acres of meadows, ancient woodland, brooks, and lakes¹ and provides an extraordinarily wide range of habitats to wildlife. Trent Country Park comprises 70 hectares of ancient woodland and about 24 ha of acid grassland - both of which are 'habitats of principle importance' in England and tend to support species that are rare elsewhere including black poplar, mistletoe and orchids.²

Additionally, the park is popular with many local groups meeting there, such as the Trent Park Running Club, Southgate Hockey Club and Friends of Trent Country Park events and workdays. Furthermore, festivals occur there in the Summer months for example '51st State' and 'MetroFest'.³

Trent Country Park is unique in its proximity to central London, which is only a 40 minute tube journey on the Picadilly Line from the adjacent Cockfosters Station.⁴

Overall, Trent

Country Park's location, size, popularity and biodiversity render it appropriate for further research and investigation and explain why I have chosen to focus on this region for my NEA project.

This investigation aims to decipher how Trent Park impacts quality of life for its users, and how environmental quality; in particular temperature and air quality, changes with distance into the park. I will also investigate the effect of Covid 19 on the impact of Trent Park on quality of life, discovering whether subsequent lockdowns have had an impact on health, comfort and enjoyment (adjectives defining quality of life) for Trent Country Park's users. I will collect primary data in the form of an online questionnaire, pollution level measurements using the sellotape method and particulate measurements, located temperature and humidity measurements, and naturalistic observation. This will enable me to address my question and sub-questions and answer my hypotheses.

Sub Questions:

- How do temperature and air quality change with distance into Trent Country Park? •
- How does Trent Country park impact its user's quality of life?
- Has the impact of Trent Country Park on quality of life changed following the Covid 19 pandemic?
