

Colour

Colour is often one of the most exciting components of a painting, but what exactly is it? Understanding the basic principles of colour theory helps you analyse how artists exploit and manipulate it to their work. They use colour together with composition, perspective, and light and shade to strengthen the impact of the subject matter.

Mixing and comparing colours

The perception of light makes colours visible. Light travels in waves of different lengths, and the same level of transparency of different wavelengths is different colours. The range of wavelengths perceived as red is called the visible spectrum. The shorter visible wavelengths appear as violet, and the longest as red. Artists can gain insight from scientific principles that describe some wavelengths and effect others. Color of colours is fundamental work. The colours in a painting are usually the colours of reflecting light.

The colour wheel

From understanding and using color, artists have developed a color wheel, which is a circular diagram that represents the color spectrum. It is a tool used by artists to understand the relationships between colors. The color wheel is divided into three main sections: primary colors, secondary colors, and tertiary colors. Primary colors are the colors that cannot be created by mixing other colors. Secondary colors are created by mixing two primary colors. Tertiary colors are created by mixing a primary color and a secondary color. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

Primary and secondary

Primary colors are the colors that cannot be created by mixing other colors. Secondary colors are created by mixing two primary colors. Tertiary colors are created by mixing a primary color and a secondary color. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

More colour mixtures

More color mixtures are created by mixing the primary and secondary colors. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

Intensity

Intensity is the brightness of a color. It is the degree to which a color is pure or mixed with white. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

Complementary

Complementary colors are colors that are opposite each other on the color wheel. They are the most contrasting colors and are used to create a strong visual impact. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

Transparency

Transparency is the degree to which a color is transparent or opaque. It is the degree to which a color allows light to pass through it. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).
