Masculinity and New War David Duriesmith,2016-11-03 This book advances the claims of feminist international relations scholars that the social construction of masculinities is key to resolving the scourges of militarism sexual violence and international insecurity More than two decades of feminist research has charted the dynamic relationship between warfare and masculinity but there has yet to be a detailed account of the role of masculinity in structuring the range of volatile civil conflicts which emerged in the Global South after the end of the Cold War By bridging feminist scholarship on international relations with the scholarship of masculinities Duriesmith advances both bodies of scholarship through detailed case study analysis By challenging the concept of new war he suggests that a new model for understanding the gendered dynamics of civil conflict is needed and proposes that the power dynamics between groups of men based on age difference ethnicity location and class form an important and often overlooked causal component to these civil conflicts Exploring the role of masculinities through two case studies the civil war in Sierra Leone 1991 2002 and the Second Sudanese Civil War 1983 2005 this book will be of great interest to postgraduate students practitioners and academics working in the fields of gender and security studies
