Building Code Compliance And Enforcement:

Building Code Compliance and Enforcement, 1990 As part of Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory's LBL technical assistance to the Sustainable City Project compliance and enforcement activities related to local and state building codes for existing and new construction were evaluated in two case studies The analysis of the City of San Francisco's Residential Energy Conservation Ordinance RECO showed that a limited prescriptive energy conservation ordinance for existing residential construction can be enforced relatively easily with little administrative costs and that compliance with such ordinances can be quite high Compliance with the code was facilitated by extensive publicity an informed public concerned with the cost of energy and knowledgeable about energy efficiency the threat of punishment Order of Abatement the use of private inspectors and training workshops for City and private inspectors The analysis of California's Title 24 Standards for new residential and commercial construction showed that enforcement of this type of code for many climate zones is more complex and requires extensive administrative support for education and training of inspectors architects engineers and builders Under this code prescriptive and performance approaches for compliance are permitted resulting in the demand for alternative methods of enforcement technical assistance plan review field inspection and computer analysis In contrast to existing construction building design and new materials and construction practices are of critical importance in new construction creating a need for extensive technical assistance and extensive interaction between enforcement personnel and the building community Compliance problems associated with building design and installation did occur in both residential and nonresidential buildings Because statewide codes are enforced by local officials these problems may increase over time as energy standards change and become more complex and as other standards eg health and safety codes remain a higher priority The California Energy Commission realizes that code enforcement by itself is insufficient and expects that additional educational and technical assistance efforts eg manuals training programs and toll free telephone lines will ameliorate these problems Building Code Compliance and Enforcement Edward L. Vine, 1990

Mainstreaming Building Energy Efficiency Codes in Developing Countries Feng Liu, Anke S. Meyer, John F. Hogan, 2010-10-12 Urbanization and growing wealth in developing countries portend a large increase of demand for modern energy services in residential commercial and public service buildings in the coming decades Pursuing energy efficiency in buildings is vital to energy security in developing countries and is identified by the Intergovernment Panel on Climate Change as having the greatest potential for cost effective reduction of CO₂ emissions by 2030 among all energy consuming sectors Building energy efficiency codes BEECs along with energy efficiency standards for major appliances and equipment are broadly recognized as a necessary government intervention to overcome persistent market barriers to capturing the economic potential of energy efficiency gains in the residential commercial and public service sectors Implementation of BEECs help prevent costly energy wastes over the lifecycles of buildings in space heating air conditioning lighting and other energy service requirements Nonetheless achieving the full potential of energy savings afforded by more energy efficient buildings requires holding people who live or work in buildings accountable for the cost of energy services Compliance enforcement has been the biggest challenge to implementing BEECs This report summarizes the findings of an extensive literature survey of the experiences of implementing BEECs in developed countries as well as those from case studies of China Egypt India and Mexico It also serves as a primer on the basic features and contents of BEECs and the commonly adopted compliance and enforcement approaches This report highlights the key challenges to improving compliance enforcement in developing countries including government commitment to energy efficiency the effectiveness of government oversight of the construction sector the compliance capacity of building supply chain and financing constraints The report notes that the process of transforming a country's building supply chain toward delivering increasingly more energy efficient buildings takes time and requires persistent government intervention through uniformly enforced and regularly updated BEECs The report recommends increased international support in strengthening the enforcement infrastructure for BEECs in middle income developing countries For low and lower middle income countries there is an urgent need to assist in improving the effectiveness of government oversight system for building construction laying the foundation for the system to also cover BEECs
