Engine Troubles

STARTING A STARTUP

When an engine starts to stall, the chances are that it has lost all the power and without the ignition system and fuel the car cannot go further forward. Many motorists have experienced this problem and have been forced to stop in a dangerous place. The cause of the problem is often a faulty ignition system. A faulty ignition system can be caused by a number of factors, including a faulty spark plug, a faulty distributor, or a faulty ignition coil. If you are experiencing this problem, it is important to have the ignition system checked by a qualified mechanic as soon as possible.
