Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers in the garment industry. The study included 600 employees from two garment factories in Mexico City. Data were collected by means of a self-administered questionnaire. Results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among female than male workers, and among those who had worked longer than shorter periods of time. There were no significant differences between the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among workers in different departments or among those who performed different tasks. The results suggest that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders is related to individual characteristics such as sex and length of service.
