

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (GW) genomic studies using international consortia project genomes of the Human Genome Project, now also include and require 20,000+ 24,000 genes that define a human being. This project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly, mouse and Drosophila, etc. The project also includes sequencing of the genomes of other species and researchers compare and contrast the genome and the function.

Why is this information important? Being able to identify the genes that are conserved in human genome and other species can help understand genetic diseases. In addition, finding other conserved genes in other species help us understand evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of our genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

However, you already know that the similarity for a number of genes is high. How do you know that? (You should know that). How is this information relevant? It should be clear that you can't just look at the genome and see that the human genome is the same as the mouse genome. You can't just look at the genome and see that the human genome is the same as the mouse genome. You can't just look at the genome and see that the human genome is the same as the mouse genome. You can't just look at the genome and see that the human genome is the same as the mouse genome.

Microinformatics is a field that combines statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer-aided analysis of genomic data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared to identify conserved genes and differences. An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can input a gene sequence or protein sequence and search for genes that are identical or similar sequences in a database.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare microorganisms and the resulting information to construct a phylogenetic tree, a diagram that shows the evolutionary relationships of species. Figure 1 below shows a phylogenetic tree.

Note that the diagram is rooted with Escherichia coli (E. coli) at the bottom. The diagram shows the evolutionary relationships of species. The diagram shows the evolutionary relationships of species. The diagram shows the evolutionary relationships of species. The diagram shows the evolutionary relationships of species.
