

The background of the slide is a photograph of an artist's workspace. In the foreground, a person's hands are visible, holding a paintbrush and working on a palette. The palette is covered with various colors of paint. In the background, a large, detailed landscape painting is displayed on a wall. The painting depicts a rugged, mountainous terrain with a body of water in the foreground. The scene is lit with warm, golden light, suggesting a sunset or sunrise. The overall atmosphere is artistic and creative.

Bartleby Scrivener Story Wall Street:

Bartleby, the Scrivener Herman Melville, 2015-08-19 Bartleby the Scrivener A Story of Wall Street 1853 is a short story by the American writer Herman Melville first serialized anonymously in two parts in the November and December editions of Putnam's Magazine and reprinted with minor textual alterations in 1856. Numerous essays are published on what according to scholar Robert Milder is unquestionably the masterpiece of the short fiction in the Melville canon. The narrator of Bartleby the Scrivener is the Lawyer who runs a law practice on Wall Street in New York. The Lawyer begins by noting that he is an elderly man and that his profession has brought him into more than ordinary contact with what would seem an interesting and somewhat singular set of men: the law copyists or scriveners. While the Lawyer knows many interesting stories of such scriveners, he bypasses them all in favor of telling the story of Bartleby, whom he finds to be the most interesting of all the scriveners. Bartleby is, according to the Lawyer, one of those beings of whom nothing is ascertainable except from the original sources, and in his case those were very small. One day the Lawyer has a small document he needs examined. He calls Bartleby in to do the job, but Bartleby responds, "I would prefer not to." This answer amazes the Lawyer, who has a natural expectancy of instant compliance. He is so amazed by this response and the calm way Bartleby says it that he cannot even bring himself to scold Bartleby. Instead, he calls in Nippers to examine the document instead.

Bartleby the Scrivener — A Story of Wall-Street Herman Melville, 2022-05-29 In Bartleby the Scrivener A Story of Wall Street Herman Melville crafts a profound narrative that explores themes of isolation, passive resistance, and the dehumanizing effects of modern capitalism. Through the character of Bartleby, a scrivener whose refrain of "I would prefer not to" encapsulates his profound disengagement from societal expectations, Melville employs a minimalist yet poignant style that reflects both the starkness of Wall Street and the complexity of human nature. The story's setting against the backdrop of 19th-century New York serves as a critical commentary on the economic ambitions and moral dissonance of the time, echoing the existential concerns that arise in a rapidly industrializing world. Herman Melville, an author underscored by the struggles with his own identity and societal roles, draws from his experiences and observations in an era marked by economic upheaval. Despite initial obscurity, Melville's later recognition as a key figure in American literature was bolstered by his exploration of complex themes in works like Moby Dick and Billy Budd. His engagement with the contradictions of human ambition and individualism is evident in Bartleby's enigmatic presence, reflecting Melville's own ambivalence toward capitalism and modernity. Bartleby the Scrivener is highly recommended for readers interested in existential literature, economic critique, and the profound implications of passive resistance. This text remains a seminal work in understanding the human condition, raising questions about free will, societal expectations, and the individual's struggle within the mechanisms of commerce. Melville's rich prose and intricate character exploration invite readers to reflect deeply on their own existence and the nature of work in a modern society.

Bartleby, the Scrivener Herman Melville, 2014-10-03 Bartleby the Scrivener A Story of Wall Street 1853 is a short story by the American writer Herman Melville first serialized anonymously in two parts in the November and December editions of Putnam's Magazine and reprinted with minor textual alterations in his The Piazza Tales in 1856. The story of the lawyer narrator who cannot bring himself to remove from his office the silent scrivener save for the repeated phrase "I would prefer not to" who neither works nor eats has always fascinated both readers and critics. Numerous essays are published on what according to scholar Robert Milder is unquestionably the masterpiece of the short fiction in the Melville canon. The narrator, an elderly unnamed Manhattan lawyer with a very comfortable business, relates the story of the strangest man he has ever known, Bartleby. At the start of his chronicle, the lawyer already employs two scriveners to copy legal documents by hand, Nippers and Turkey. An increase in business leads him to advertise for a third, and he hires the forlorn-looking Bartleby in the hope that his calmness will soothe the irascible temperaments of the other two. At first, Bartleby produces a large volume of high-quality work. But one day, when asked to help proofread a document, Bartleby answers with what soon becomes his perpetual response to every request: "I would prefer not to." To the dismay of the lawyer and to the irritation of the other employees, Bartleby performs fewer and fewer tasks and eventually none. The narrator makes several futile attempts to reason with him and to learn something about him, and when he stops by the office unexpectedly, he discovers that Bartleby has started living there. Tension builds as business associates wonder why Bartleby is always there. Sensing the threat of ruined reputation but emotionally unable to evict Bartleby, the narrator finally decides to move out himself. Soon, the new tenants come to ask for help; Bartleby still will not leave. He now sits on the stairs all day and sleeps in the building's doorway. The narrator visits him and attempts to reason with him and surprises even himself by inviting Bartleby to come live with him. But Bartleby would prefer not to. Later, the narrator returns to find that Bartleby has been forcibly removed and imprisoned in the Tombs. The narrator visits him, finding Bartleby even glummer than usual; he bribes a turnkey to make sure Bartleby gets enough food. But when he returns a few days later, he discovers that Bartleby has died of starvation, having apparently preferred not to eat. Some time afterward, the narrator hears a rumor that Bartleby had worked in a dead letter office and reflects that dead letters would have made anyone of Bartleby's temperament sink into an even darker gloom. The story closes with the narrator's resigned and pained sigh: "Ah, Bartleby! Ah, humanity!"

Herman Melville may have written the story as an emotional response to the bad reviews garnered by Pierre, his preceding novel. Christopher Sten writes in Bartleby the Transcendentalist: Melville's Dead Letter to Emerson that Melville found inspiration in Ralph Waldo Emerson's essays, particularly The Transcendentalist, which shows parallels to Bartleby. Bartleby is a scrivener, a kind of clerk or a copyist who obstinately refuses to go on doing the sort of writing demanded of him. During the spring of 1851, Melville felt similarly about his work on Moby-Dick. Thus, Bartleby may represent Melville's frustration with his own situation as a writer, and the story itself is about a writer who forsakes conventional modes because of an irresistible preoccupation with the most baffling philosophical questions. Bartleby may also be seen to represent Melville's relation to his commercial democratic society.
