District Six:

District Six was an impoverished suburb near Cape Town city centre. Although it was poor it was regarded as one of the most cosmopolitan areas on the continent. It was inhabited by people of many races and nationalities who lived in relative harmony. However, this came under threat when the National Party took power in 1948 and started to enforce their policy of Apartheid. The multicultural District Six was seen as a threat and attempts were made to move people out of the area. The most brazen of these came in 1966 when the suburb was declared as a white area under the Group Areas Act. Over the next eighteen years more than 60,000 people were removed to the Cape Flats and everything was bulldozed except for a church and a few mosques.

The Structure:

The book is written in three parts titled "Morning", "Afternoon" and "Night", set in 1955, 1960 and 1970 respectively. Each part starts with a first person introduction from a person who we assume is Richard Rive (the author). Following this are several chapters written in the third person that generally feature the residents of Buckingham Palace as main characters. The book starts out with quite a light mood that gets ever darker as the story progresses.

Buckingham Palace:

Buckingham Palace is the name given to a row of five cottages owned by Mr Katzen and inhabited by the main characters from the story. The cottages are situated on the left-hand side of Caledon Street and we don't know for sure where they get the name Buckingham Palace from, although many other features of the district have British names, so perhaps it stems from that. It's very likely also a tongue-in-cheek name because the row of cottages was obviously nothing like the Buckingham Palace in London (i.e. not posh or expensive. We know that at one end of the row sits St Mark's Church but what sits at the other is unknown. The house furthest from the church is a house of pleasure (brothel) named the "Casbah". This is inhabited by Mary
