Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were randomly assigned to either a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The control group did not participate in any training. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test. Secondary outcomes included changes in health-related quality of life, measured by the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the training program significantly improved physical fitness and health-related quality of life in the participants compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective intervention for improving physical fitness and health-related quality of life in sedentary middle-aged women.
