BREEDING CHARACTERISTICS OF YELLOW-
BILLED CUCKOOS IN ARIZONA

By

WILLIAM J. HAMILTON III and MARION E. HAMILTON
California Academy of Sciences¹

The yellow-billed cuckoo is widely distributed throughout the United States, southern Canada, and northern Mexico. The maximum nest, Clavicornis as usually known, is found in the great southern marshes and in some of the southwestern mountain lands. There are no striking morphological gaps, however, between the species here mentioned and other species and the only variation in the life history consists of certain seasonal variations gathered by Hunt (1929). The seasonal independence of the species, particularly, as found in widely different areas, is more important, concerning only its seasonal behavior. Hunt reports on the West, especially along river bottoms in the southern part of its range. In California some of the habitats and other facts have been reported by Hamilton (1931) when observed in populations existing along a stretch of Sonoran Country in northern California, and by (1931) and Thomas (1931) when reported observations of populations in San Angelo and Riverside counties in southern California.

In Arizona the only previous was Hamilton's (1931) report of a number of nests along Billie Creek, near Tucson, and Hamilton's (1931) observations on the habits of the species in the San Pedro Valley near Phoenix.

Summary of Observations

Special thanks are due Clark Hunt who participated in the field investigations during August and made many significant observations. Aditional thanks

¹ Through the kindness of Mr. W. J. Hamilton, Jr., San Francisco.
