When a patient is referred to the clinic, the first step is to take a history and perform a physical examination. The patient's medical history, including any previous episodes of seizures, is reviewed. The physical examination focuses on the neurological system, including the head, eyes, ears, nose, throat, and spine. The patient's vital signs, including blood pressure, heart rate, and respiratory rate, are also recorded. The next step is to perform a neurological examination, which includes testing the patient's reflexes, muscle strength, and coordination. The patient's cognitive function is also assessed. The results of the examination are used to determine the patient's level of severity and to develop a treatment plan. The treatment plan may include medication, surgery, or a combination of both. The patient is then scheduled for a follow-up appointment to monitor their progress.
