

Lecture 12: Air Climate Change

Lecture topic: Temperature and Relative Humidity

2. Introduction to Maps

Learning Objectives: Students completing this lecture should be able to explain the importance of maps in understanding climate change and the different types of maps.

- Reference maps are designed to provide a clear and accurate representation of a specific area. They are used to show the location of a place and its relationship to other places.
 - Topographic reference maps show the physical features of a landscape, such as mountains, rivers, and lakes.
 - Political reference maps show the boundaries of countries, states, and cities.
 - Thematic reference maps show specific information, such as population density or climate data.
 - General reference maps show a broad overview of a region, including its major features and locations.
- Thematic maps are designed to show a specific theme or topic. They are used to illustrate the distribution of a particular variable across a geographic area.
 - Thematic maps can show a wide range of variables, including population, climate, and land use.
 - Thematic maps are often used to show the spatial distribution of a variable, such as the distribution of rainfall or temperature.
 - Thematic maps can be used to show the change in a variable over time, such as the change in sea level rise or the distribution of a disease.
 - Thematic maps can be used to show the relationship between a variable and other factors, such as the relationship between climate and land use.
