

How effective are marketing processes in marketing management

Marketing processes play a crucial role in effective marketing management as they are essential for ensuring the success of the marketing plan. This is fundamental to supporting and implementing the business's edge over its competition. By undertaking a comprehensive situational analysis and identifying target markets, enterprises can bolster their market share. Similarly, implementing proficient market research plays a pivotal role in facilitating product diversification and amplifying product growth. Furthermore, by formulating astute marketing strategies, businesses can optimise their customer service in order to gain customer loyalty. The case studies of McDonald's and Apple demonstrate how the effective integration of these key marketing processes has enabled them to succeed in their respective industries, putting them ahead of the competition. It is therefore imperative that businesses continue to conduct and adapt marketing processes to remain competitive in an ever-evolving business environment.

The situational analysis is a marketing process that is able to increase a business's market share which supplies an edge over the competition. The situational analysis consists of the SWOT analysis and product life cycle. Product analysis examines the current position of the goods and/or services produced, placing it in different stages of its life cycle. By conducting a SWOT analysis a business can identify strategies to address its weaknesses and manage potential opportunities and threats. This indicates the business's standing in comparison to competition, adjusting to such provides competitive advantage. Within 2013, McDonald's found an opportunity through a SWOT analysis arising from the popularity of home meal delivery. McDonald's began developing this globally and in 2021 more than 20% of sales came through delivery, whilst also recording a net income of $2.1 billion in the third quarter, reflecting a 22% increase compared to the previous year. This occurred after delivery capacity was extended to over 32,000 stores in 2021 from just a measly 3,000 in 2016. Therefore, through the strategic implementation of the situational analysis, McDonald's identified key areas for improvement, enabling them to gain a greater market share. Hence, proving the significance of utilising a situational analysis in order to increase market share and competitive advantage.

When increasing market share, it is imperative that the business identifies its target market so that the business is in a better position than its competition. Determining a target market
