Directions:

- Read the following information.
- Answer the questions on the second page.

The nervous system is the body's control and communication center. It has three broad functions: detecting stimuli, interpreting them, and initiating appropriate responses. Its basic structure is outlined below.

The Human Nervous System

The central nervous system (CNS) comprises the brain and spinal cord. The spinal cord is a cylinder of nervous tissue extending from the base of the brain down the back, protected by the spinal column. It transmits messages to and from the brain, and controls spinal reflexes.

The peripheral nervous system, or PNS, (right, far right) comprises all the nerves and sensory receptors outside the central nervous system.

Below: cross sections through the spinal cord to show entry and exit of neurons.

Gray matter

Sensory neurons enter the spinal cord by the dorsal root.

White matter (myelinated nerves)

Motor neurons leave the spinal cord by the ventral root.

The spinal cord has an H shaped central area of gray matter, comprising nerve cell bodies, dendrites, and synapses around a central canal filled with cerebrospinal fluid. The area of white matter contains the nerve fibers.

The Peripheral Nervous System (PNS)

The PNS comprises sensory and motor divisions. Peripheral nerves all enter or leave the CNS, either from the spinal cord (the spinal nerves) or the brain (cranial nerves). They can be sensory (from sensory receptors), motor (running to a muscle or gland), or mixed (containing sensory and motor neurons). Cranial nerves are numbered in roman numerals, I-XII. They include the vagus (X), a mixed nerve with an important role in regulating bodily functions, including heart rate and digestion.

Sensory Division

Sensory nerves arise from sensory receptors (left) and carry messages to the central nervous system for processing. The sensory system keeps the central nervous system aware of the external and internal environments. This division includes the familiar sense organs such as ears, eyes (A), and taste buds (B) as well as internal receptors that monitor internal state (e.g. thirst, hunger, body position, movement, pain).

Motor Division

Motor nerves carry impulses from the CNS to effectors: muscles (left) and glands. The motor division comprises two parts:

Somatic nervous system: the neurons that carry impulses to voluntary (skeletal) muscles (C).

Autonomic nervous system: regulates visceral functions over which there is generally no conscious control, e.g. heart rate, gut peristalsis involving smooth muscle (D), pupil reflex, and sweating.
