

Introduction to Market System

The market system, also known as the free market or capitalism, is an economic system where the prices for goods and services are determined by the open market and consumers. It operates based on the laws of supply and demand, with little to no government intervention. Individuals and businesses are free to engage in economic activities, and prices are determined by the competition and the interactions between buyers and sellers.

Definition and Components of Market System

Demand and Supply Dynamics

The market system is driven by the forces of demand and supply. Demand relates to the quantity of a product that consumers are willing to purchase at various prices, while supply refers to the quantity of a product that producers are willing to offer at various prices. The equilibrium between these two forces is crucial in determining prices and quantities in the market.

Components of the Market System

The market system comprises various components, including producers, consumers, government regulations, and competition. Each component plays a significant role in shaping the dynamics of the market and affects the allocation of resources, prices, and the distribution of goods and services.
