

INTRODUCTION

- What do you mean by rural settlement?

Rural settlements are communities in non-urban areas where inhabitants are primarily engaged in agriculture or related activities.

- Why Study Size and Spacing?

The size and spacing of these settlements vary significantly due to a combination of environmental, economic, and historical factors. Factors such as soil fertility, agricultural productivity, flood impact, and population density influence how far apart settlements are and the size of their populations. Studying these patterns helps us understand the relationship between human habitation and the natural environment, providing insights for rural planning and resource management.
