

Excellent education

Our overarching aim is that all autistic children and young people have an excellent and inclusive education that enables them to learn, thrive and achieve. Ultimately, this will support them to have a good quality of life, including the realistic prospect of living and working as part of their communities.

Our education settings remained open throughout the coronavirus pandemic. So, after 18 months of virtual, home-based learning, and social distancing, we were delighted to return to face-to-face learning for all pupils at The Priory School and The Five School and learners at Lakeside College. But the pandemic had not gone away and continued to shape the lives of autistic children and young people.

Despite this challenge, our education settings continued to work to the maximum and with all of our staff, pupils, learners and their families. We are committed to providing ongoing support in the aftermath of, and recovering from, the pandemic.

In this first year of our Time for Ambition strategy we made progress against the following objectives:

- We will continue to research, evaluate and refine our Ambition Approach, not to be confused with current education practice.

and support meaningful transitions and progress for autistic children and young people.

- We will share our model and expertise in autism education nationally through our policy and enhancing, individual, learning consistency and national upskilling work.
- Our priority is to support autistic children and young people to get through and recover from the coronavirus pandemic. We will ensure that we achieve positive outcomes through career education, and support, and progress to education, employment or training.
- We will develop new education settings, including a new school in Kingston, and consider further opportunities for new education provision. Our guiding principle will be to ensure any new settings provide an excellent and inclusive education.

During the 2020-21 financial year, we continued to support autistic children and young people.

This year was dominated by the Government's publication of the long-awaited review of the special educational needs and disability (SEND) system.

Commissioned by the Treasury from the Department for Education in 2019, the SEND Review published its recommendations in early 2022.

We knew that it's critical to get the review of the SEND system right for autistic children and young people. Autism is the most prevalent primary mental health condition, with an Education, Health and Care Plan, a significant proportion of children receiving SEND support across schools.

In January 2022, we published our Five Rules for the SEND Review based on the views of autistic children, young people and their families.

After the review was published, our first response was featured in the Guardian and on Channel 4 news.

During the consultation period, we held meetings for groups of pupils with officials from the Department for Education. Two autistic young people met with then Children's Minister, Sir David Davies.

We presented at a meeting of the early Parliament Group on Autism, which gave us another opportunity to share our views with the minister. We also spoke at sector events and conferences.

Our website and social media amplified autistic young people's voices, as we shared advice of their requirements and recommendations.

the SEND review Alice's story

Despite leaving the education system early, Alice is a young woman who is now working in a retail environment. She has a passion for learning and is currently studying for a Level 2 certificate in retail. Alice is a young woman who is now working in a retail environment. She has a passion for learning and is currently studying for a Level 2 certificate in retail.

During my time at Alice, I grew in focus and became a more confident and assertive person. I was able to take on more responsibility and was able to take on more responsibility and was able to take on more responsibility.

I was really happy to be able to go to the school again. I was really happy to be able to go to the school again. I was really happy to be able to go to the school again.

Health and wellbeing

Good physical and mental health and wellbeing are essential for an autistic child or young person to thrive. Right from the start, timely diagnosis followed by post-diagnostic support lays the foundations for understanding autism and how to achieve the right health care and support.

Autistic people also need services that support good mental health by reducing isolation and early intervention through engaging in specialist support.

In this first year of our Time for Ambition strategy we have made progress against our objective to plan post-diagnostic support services so that all autistic young people can receive support to improve their wellbeing during and after diagnosis.
