It is interesting to compare the results from the bridge presentation. When asked to study, participants on presentation were likely to study the entire set of materials and consequently, the entire presentation. When on their own, they were likely to study only a limited number of materials, and not attempt to study all of the materials. This indicates that presentation itself was enough to prompt students to attempt to study all of the presentation. It is an interesting question whether the same phenomenon would occur in a live, or more interactive, presentation. It is possible that students would be more likely to study all of the materials if they were presented with a presentation that was more interactive. It is possible that students would be more likely to study all of the materials if they were presented with a presentation that was more interactive.
