Agricultural R and D in the Developing World Philip G. Pardey, Julian M. Alston, Roley Piggott, 2006 The world's agricultural economy was transformed remarkably during the 20th century The agricultural productivity growth that fueled this change was generated primarily by agricultural R D financed and conducted by a small group of rich countries especially the United States but also Japan Germany and France In an increasingly interdependent world both rich and poor countries have depended on agricultural research conducted in the private and public laboratories of these few countries even if they have not contributed to financing the activity But now the rich country research agendas are shifting In particular they are no longer as interested in simple productivity enhancement Dietary patterns and other priorities change as incomes increase Food security concerns are still pervasive among poor people predominantly in poor countries In rich countries we see a declining emphasis on enhancing the production of staple foods and an increasing emphasis on enhancing certain attributes of food such as growing demand for processed and so called functional foods and on food production systems such as organic farming humane livestock production systems localized food sources and fair trade coffee In addition to growing differences between rich and poor countries in consumer demand for innovation research agendas may diverge because of differences in producer and processor demands Farmers in rich countries are demanding high technology inputs that often are not as relevant for subsistence agriculture such as precision farming technology or other capital intensive methods As well as differences in value adding processes to serve consumer demands differences in farm production technologies are emerging to serve the evolving agribusiness demands for farm products with specific attributes for particular food feed energy medical or industrial applications The purpose of this volume is to document the changing institutions and investments in agricultural R D in less developed countries in part to form a companion volume to Paying for Agricultural Productivity by providing a more complete global picture of the issues

Land, Trees, and Women Maria Agnes R. Quisumbing, 2001-01-01. How do women's land rights change as customary tenure systems give way to individualized land tenure? While the individualization of land rights creates incentives for poor farmers in marginal areas to adopt agroforestry, not much is known about its impact on women's land rights. Land, Trees, and Women examines the evolution of customary land tenure institutions in areas of Western Ghana and Western Sumatra where traditional matrilineal inheritance systems have been changing. In these two areas, the authors find that individualization of land tenure has contributed to both increased gender equity and greater efficiency in agroforestry management. While property rights institutions are moving toward providing proper incentives for efficient natural resource management, the authors conclude that any program or legal framework that assigns rights to resources must be evaluated for barriers to women's participation.

Natural Resource Management in the Hillside of Honduras Bruno Barbier, Gilles Bergeron, 2001-01-01. Farmers who live in fragile tropical hillside areas often operate under severe resource constraints and face difficult tradeoffs when confronted with changes in production conditions. Using a bioeconomic linear programming model, this study simulates the effects of population, market and technological changes on farmers' income and on their management of the natural resource in a hillside area of Central Honduras. The results show that economic growth and agricultural intensification are not necessarily adverse for fragile environments. In fact, farmer incomes would be much lower and degradation much higher if intensive agriculture had not been adopted. Such a result, however, must be framed within a complex set of conditioning factors among which agroecology plays a fundamental role Although the economic advantages of horticultural production are clear in the area studied this strategy is not suited for all contexts This report offers a series of policy recommendations that implicitly recognize such limitations thereby helping to direct resources where they will have their greatest impact Strategies for Sustainable Land Management and Poverty Reduction in Uganda Ephraim Nkonya,2004-01-01 References pp 123 136 Microbiology Australia ,2001-03
