

A MODEST PROPOSAL

TONE AND IRONY

Point of view:
"This number of souls in this Kingdom being usually reckoned one million and a half, of these I calculate that only two hundred thousand couples should remain and breed."

Context:
The year 1726, eighteenth century, Ireland. Poor, especially children, as if they were livestock or commodities only.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

- Britain in 1726 during a time of intense poverty and famine in Ireland.
- British landlords and their wealthy agents (the clergy) at home believed protesting in England against Ireland's poor was useless.
- The Church's rich clergy suffered from local political and economic conditions, not from help from the British government.
- References of the time often suggested that children "lead" to different social conditions - children "ruined" the future, "wasting" the future social conditions - children "ruined" the future, "wasting" the future.

UNDERSTATEMENT

Point of view:
"These children might be made into extremely good soldiers and musicians (leading to genocide)."

Context:
The suggestion is presented in a very calm, logical way, as though it were a practical solution to the problem of a government with a shortage of soldiers. The tone is so calm it makes the horror of the suggestion seem even more understatement would be a perfect fit.
