

4.4.4 The Nervous System

Plants have grown to make a simplified nervous system consisting of specialized structures for conducting, processing and integrating information about the environment using chemical messengers that travel by plant hormones. Plants conduct electrical signals using long, continuous cells interconnected in plant nervous systems. These signals coordinate growth and development as follows:

Complete the following table to compare the structure, growth, and function of the four types of plant nervous systems.

	Diffuse	Mesophyll	Complex vascular system
Structure:	Central cell with several lines radiating outwards to surrounding cells.	A central cell with several lines radiating outwards to surrounding cells.	A central cell with several lines radiating outwards to surrounding cells.
