Chapter Three

Language Maintenance and Shift

This chapter discusses the political and economic factors that influence Language choice.

Language shift in different communities:

A- Migrant minorities:

Example 1 shows that migrant families provide examples of language shift. The example illustrates how a British Hindu woman living in Britain tended to use Gujarati at home as well as her work place with her friends as their home language. However when she was promoted (and this shows that she has moved to a high level which forces her to use an H variety) she used English more of the time. Finally when she was moved to the Main Office she used English all the time. This example shows the experience of a minority in a monolingual country, and how the predominant society's language over time displaced the mother tongue of the minority. This shift was made by social factors, as the shift occurs from one language to another for communicative needs.

In English speaking countries like UK, USA or Australia, children are exposed to English in school, and over time they start to use English in home when they discuss school topics or even friends' issues. Gradually English infiltrates the home through the Children who use English when they grow up and be engaged in jobs.

Immigrants who look and sound different have to use the language of the mainstream or the predominant society. They are under pressure, and therefore they shift to English. Speaking good English is then regarded as a sign of successful assimilation. This leads to abandoning the minority language. Typically migrants are monolingual in their mother tongue, their children are bilingual, and their grandchildren are monolingual in the language of the host country.

B- Non-migrant minorities:

Here, the shift is caused by political, economic and social changes in a community. Example 2 shows how people of Oberwart, which was a part of Hungary before WW1, spoke Hungarian to each other, and German to outsiders. When the war was over, the town became a part of Austria, and grew to be an industrial area, the German language was increased to include domains of school, education, business and official transactions. It also symbolized formality and social distance. On the other hand, Hungarian was the language of solidarity used for social and affective functions. It became associated with peasants, and became old-fashioned, while the German language was associated with economic and social progress. Later, the young people used German with their friends, and even parents used German with their children. Hungarian was confined to prayers and church. The use of linguistic
