There is a close link between the images above. Each is home to a variety of plants and species, but no two are the same. Although they're all habitable to life, these biomes have quite a lot of differences too. Many of these differences are abiotic, or non-living. They include the amount of sunlight, the amount of oxygen in the air or water, and the kind of soil present.

infer, or make your best guess, about some of the abiotic factors in each of the images:

Location	Temperature	Amount of rainfall

Similarly, these locations are all home to many skottle, or living, factions as well.

What kinds of species do you think live in each of these places? Feel free to use any of the species in the Species list, or even make up your own!

Lastly, the chaparral biome is a coastal biome with hot, dry summers and mild winters. It has mostly shrubs with a few short trees. Deer, birds, and rabbits live in the chaparral.

There are many different types of desert. Some are very hot, but did you know that some can be cold too? The Sahara Desert in Africa is the largest hot desert, but Antarctica is the largest desert in the world! It's cold there, but there is so little rain (or snow) that it's still considered a desert. Some plants and animals are adapted to dry, hot deserts. Many desert animals are able to store water in their bodies, or the ability to remain dormant (similar to hibernation) for a long

There are several different kinds of forest biome, including: temperate deciduous forest, chaparral, tundra, and rainforest. The rainforest is likely the largest forest. This lush habitat stays warm and wet all year long. Yearly rainfall can average up to 3,000 cm (400 inches)! Rainforest are home to a broad range of plants and animals as food is rarely hard to find in this abundant ecosystem. Here you can find parrots, sloths, and

The temperate forest is common in the US, Canada, Europe, and Asia. Here you'll find deciduous trees which lose their leaves in the winter. In fact, that's what this biome is famous for: it's 4 unique seasons. The summers in a temperate forest are warm, and the winters are cold. In these forests you'll find bears, deer,

The taiga is a colder forest with cone-bearing, coniferous trees that keep their leaves all winter. These forests are found in Northern Canada and Russia. The days are long in the summer and short in the winter due to the altitude of these habitats, so

Earth is an amazing planet. It has many different environments that make perfect homes for millions of species. The largest major habitats that exist worldwide are known as biomes. Most likely, you're already familiar with many of these: desert, rainforest, grassland, etc. Each biome is unique and therefore essential to sustaining the life that calls it home. Conservation of all habitats is crucial for maintaining biodiversity, or the amazing variety of life, that makes our Earth so

How many biomes are there? Do all water environments constitute a single aquatic biome? Are all tree-filled ecosystems considered a forest biome? The number of biomes is a matter of definition, and the answer is not obvious. Let's take a look at some of the largest biomes, and the abiotic and biotic factors that define them.

Aquatic Biomes
Since water covers most of the Earth, the aquatic biomes are the largest. They include the open ocean, estuaries, and freshwater biomes. The marine biomes are the largest of the aquatic biomes.
