

This longitudinal section of a large arteriole (A) and connective tissue venule (V) shows the connective tissue capsule of a submandibular gland displays a duct (D) of the gland between the two vessels. Observe that the thickness of the arteriole wall approximates the diameter of the lumen (L). The endothelial muscle (M) are readily evident in both vessels, as are the smooth muscle cells (SM) of the tunica media. The arteriole also presents an internal elastic lamina (EL) between the tunica media and the endothelial cells. The tunica adventitia (TA) of the arteriole displays nuclei of fibroblasts, whereas those of the venule merge imperceptibly with the surrounding connective tissue. Glandular acini are evident in this field as are serous cells (SC) and serous demilunes (DL).

In this photomicrograph of the monkey corneal stroma, the molecular layer displays longitudinal sections of a capillary. Note that the endothelial cell nuclei (N) are occasionally in the field of view. The cytoplasm (C) of the highly attenuated endothelial cells is visible as thin, dark lines, bordering the lumen (L) of the capillary. Red blood cells (arrow) are noted to be discarded as they pass through the narrow lumen of the vessel. Inset: Capillary, a.s. Monkey. Plastic section, x540. The connective tissue represented in this photomicrograph displays bundles of collagen fibers (CF), nuclei of connective tissue cells (arrow), and a cross-section of a capillary (C), without endothelial and mesothelial (N) is clearly evident.

KEY

A	arteriole	Ar	arteriovenous anastomosis
C	capillary	Ca	capillary	CD	corpus ciliare
CP	collagenous fibers	CH	chondrocyte	SM	smooth muscle cell
CT	collagenous connective tissue	CS	condensing substance	SU	suspensory ligament
	fibrous	EC	endothelial cell	TA	tunica adventitia
EP	epithelium	EL	elastic lamina	TM	tunica media
D	duct	H	hemocyte	Vr	vasculature
E	epithelium	PC	pericyte

This small arteriole (A) and its venule (V) are located in the tunica adventitia (TA) in the lower left-hand corner of the tunica media (TM) of a monkey stomach. Observe the obvious difference between the diameters of the arteriole and the venule as well as the thickness of their walls. Due to the greater vascularity of the tunica media (TM) of the arteriole, the venule (V) of its endothelial cells bulge into its round lumen. The tunica media (TM) of the venule is much reduced, whereas the tunica adventitia (TA) is well developed and is composed of all the layers of connective tissue (CT) interspersed with elastic fibers (not evident in this hematoxylin and eosin section).

This photomicrograph presents a villus from mucosa of duodenum. Note the simple columnar epithelium (E) underpinned with loose connective tissue (CT) containing some goblet cells (GC). The connective tissue lamina propria also plays numerous plasma cells (PC), macrophages (MC), lymphocytes (LY), and smooth muscle fibers (SM). The longitudinal section of the human (L) lined with endothelium (EN) is a lacteal, a blind ending lymphatic channel. Since lymph vessels do not transport red blood cells, the lacteal appears to be empty, due in fact to the fact that lymph, subsequent to a fatty meal, actually contains chylomicrons. Observe that the wall of the lacteal is very firm in relation to the diameter of the vessel.
