have plunged Japan into irrelevance but that's precisely when its cultural clout soared when once again Japan got to the future a little ahead of the rest of us Hello Kitty the Nintendo Entertainment System and multimedia empires like Dragon Ball Z were more than marketing hits Artfully packaged dangerously cute and dizzyingly fun these products gave us new tools for coping with trying times They also transformed us as we consumed them connecting as well as isolating us in new ways opening vistas of imagination and pathways to revolution Through the stories of an indelible group of artists geniuses and oddballs Pure Invention reveals how Japan's pop media complex remade global culture Schools and Screens Victoria Cain, 2024-02-06 Why screens in schools from film screenings to instructional television to personal computers did not bring about the educational revolution promised by reformers Long before Chromebook giveaways and remote learning screen media technologies were enthusiastically promoted by American education reformers Again and again as schools deployed film screenings television programs and computer games screen based learning was touted as a cure for all educational ills But the transformation promised by advocates for screens in schools never happened In this book Victoria Cain chronicles important episodes in the history of educational technology as reformers technocrats public television producers and computer scientists tried to harness the power of screen based media to shape successive generations of students Cain describes how beginning in the 1930s champions of educational technology saw screens in schools as essential tools for training citizens and presented films to that end Among the films screened for educational purposes was the notoriously racist Birth of a Nation In the 1950s and 1960s both technocrats and leftist educators turned to screens to prepare young Americans for Cold War citizenship and from the 1970s through the 1990s as commercial television and personal computers arrived in classrooms screens in schools represented an increasingly privatized vision of schooling and civic engagement Cain argues that the story of screens in schools is not simply about efforts to develop the right technological tools rather it reflects ongoing tensions over citizenship racial politics private funding and distrust of teachers Ultimately she shows that the technologies that reformers had envisioned as improving education and training students in civic participation in fact deepened educational inequities Full Range Leadership Development John J.
