Abstract: Purpose: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. Design: A quasi-experimental, pretest-posttest design was used. Setting: The study was conducted in a community-based setting. Participants: A total of 20 sedentary, middle-aged women participated in the study. Measurements and Main Results: The study measured the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The results showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the participants. The mean score for the physical health scale increased from 1.5 to 2.5, and the mean score for the psychological health scale increased from 1.5 to 2.5. The results also showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the participants. The mean score for the physical health scale increased from 1.5 to 2.5, and the mean score for the psychological health scale increased from 1.5 to 2.5. Conclusion: The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can have a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program can be used as a means of improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
