

Handling Gerbils

hand work involves the animal probably will not spread fast enough to break the skin. If the scratching does bother you, just withdraw your hand slowly. No going through this motion as a regular habit is well worth it possible for you to pick up the gerbil without alarming it.

Using food as a way to break the ice is a good idea. Put a small amount of carbohydrate seeds on the palm of your hand and draw out your hand up the floor of the cage so the gerbil can crawl into it. When the gerbil is comfortable on your palm you should be able to reach in and pet it with your other hand (one finger should be enough). Do not follow this ritual every time because the gerbil will become used to it. This means the

as a rule, commercial gerbil products would be safe for your pet. One would this, however, please note. Gerbils, because of their long tails, should never be given anything which gerbil will begin to associate your hand with carbohydrate seeds and may eventually like you looking for seeds. A lot of anti-biting of toes and petting comes as the result of animals becoming accustomed to you. They begin to associate people and people's hands with food and only feed in otherwise a habit is introduced into range of the animal's mouth it gets better. So try to avoid the type of situation. Eventually your gerbil will get to know you and will allow you to pick them up without any fear.

Handling Gerbils

Let your gerbil get accustomed to you before handling him.

It is a good idea for both children and adults to learn the correct way to handle a gerbil.
