Changes in the 21st century classroom and recent shifts in academic pedagogy suggest that information for information sake is in the process of being phased out for a problem case based approach to learning. Students now are being asked to learn material outside of the class so they can engage in active classroom discussion and participate in different group activities. Not only content therefore but style in the classroom is changing fast the flipped classroom being ever more popular. Part of the challenge for the world historian is figuring out how this type of pedagogy can be applied in a setting where the sage on the stage approach is being replaced by more interactive forms of learning. Asked to regularly participate students are being asked not to memorize but how to think and how to evaluate the reliability of different sources of information. Looking to build on interactive learning The Thinking Past is based on the premise that asking questions and evaluating sources represents a new and an insightful way of presenting material on world history. While content on states such as the Songhay the Ming and the Aztecs and on nomadic people remains an important part of the work we believe that the classroom experience of debating different issues such as the origins of war and the nature of empire serves as a solid foundation for actually thinking about world history.
