

Does ACT® Test Prediction Accuracy Depend on Testing Accommodations Received in Grades 10 and 11?

JEFF ALLEN, PHD

Introduction

Recent research has shown that grade 10 ACT Aspire® scores are strongly correlated with grade 11 ACT test scores.¹ To enhance interpretation of ACT Aspire scores and inform student planning, predicted ACT score ranges are reported for students who take ACT Aspire in grades 9 or 10.² The correlations and predicted ACT score ranges were estimated using all available data, including students who tested with special accommodations. Predictive accuracy was not examined separately for students who received testing accommodations, however. To date, the number of students who have taken ACT Aspire in early high school and the ACT is limited and likely too small to examine predictive accuracy for each group of students who tested with different types of accommodations.

Prior to the launch of ACT Aspire though, the ACT Plan® assessment was administered to students in grade 10; as a result, there are thousands of students who took ACT Plan in grade 10 and the ACT in grade 11, including many who tested with accommodations on one or both tests. In this brief, ACT Plan-to-ACT prediction accuracy is examined for each subgroup of students defined by different types of testing accommodations.

Data and Method

Records from three ACT Plan testing years were matched to those from three ACT testing years (Table 1). Students were included in the sample if they took ACT Plan in grade 10 and the ACT in grade 11 and took the two tests between 12 and 18 months apart. The sample consisted of 1,583,067 students, of whom 95.8% took
