

Assessing creativity: The Test for Creative Thinking - Drawing Production (TCT-DP)

Ulrich K. Jähne

University of Bamberg, Germany urbam@uni-bamberg.de

The Test for Creative Thinking - Drawing Production (TCT-DP), as design, concept and evaluation criteria as well as experimental and results of application are described. The test was designed to measure a more holistic concept of creativity than the more quantitatively oriented traditional divergent thinking tests. The specific design using several drawings is explained. The drawing production is evaluated by means of a set of criteria, which at the same time represent the underlying test construct. The test has been tested with various age and ability groups; there were no significant differences between male and female subjects. Further studies with data concerning the reliability and validity of the TCT-DP are provided.

Creative thinking, drawing production, holistic, divergent, gifted

INTRODUCTION

More traditional creativity tests give more quantitative information about a very restricted aspect of creativity only. This was especially true for the two creativity tests which were published and available in Germany in the 1970s, when two differences in the construction of a new measure called Test Instrumente, the Test zur Divergenz Denken (Test for Divergent Thinking) (TDM; H. Manderlik, 1977) and the Test zur Kreativität (Verbal-Creative-Test) (VCT; Schupp, 1977), were very much oriented on to their aspect of application. The TDM was constructed only for three classes (4th, 5th, 6th) and the VCT only for sixth graders and adults from age 17 on with good verbal education, when the test only was tested accepted as a fairly high level. Both instruments are relatively sensitive to application and evaluation errors. The TDM (and a German version, in context of a test-retest or test-retest collection of various creativity tasks from the American tradition (Guilford, Torrance, Wallach and Kravitz). The VCT, which is very much dependent on general verbal and intellectual abilities. Furthermore both tests are open tests, that are more to judgement than to an application in environment. And both instruments did not fully to divergent thinking respectively, were oriented only to the aspect of productivity, that is the quantity of usually verbally described ideas.

These limitations in concept and range of application were one reason for Jähne and Jähne (1995, 1996, Jähne and Jähne, 1998) to develop their new instrument, the Test zur schöpferischen Denken - Fortentwicklung (TDM-F) (Jähne and Jähne, 1997), or, in English: Test for Creative Thinking - Drawing Production (TCT-DP) (Jähne and Jähne, 1998).¹ This instrument serves not to be seen as an attempt to apply a more holistic and generalised approach to diagnosis of creativity. The German term 'schöpferisch' was chosen consciously in order to
