

Adjusting Valve Assembly

The adjusting valve acts as a hydraulic pressure regulator. It automatically "locks-out" the 5-4-R pump when system pressure reaches 1500 psi (1034 kPa) and allows the excess flow to return to the tank (see item 1). When the system pressure drops to 900 psi (620 kPa), due to control valve action, the adjusting valve will "unlock" and restrict pump flow to build system pressure back up to 1500 psi. This cycle will repeat itself over and over again during machine operation.

The four major adjusting valve components are:

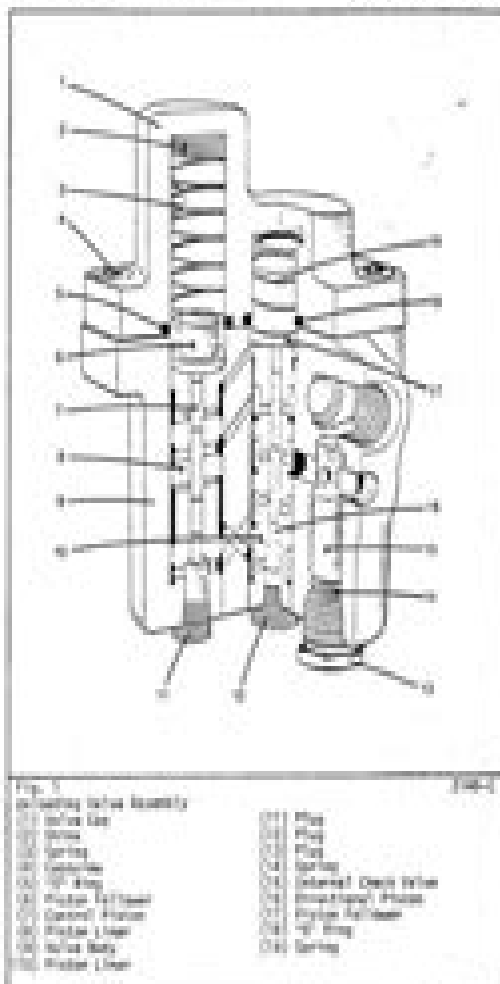

- (1) Control Pressure Spring (2) - This spring balance against the accumulator system's pressure.
- (3) Control Pressure (3) - Movement of this piston controls the direction and movement of directional control valves.
- (4) Directional Pressure (4) - This piston restricts 5-4-R pump flow when in response (locked), or in accumulator and spring (unlock).
- (5) Relief Check Valve (5) - This check valve prevents reverse oil flow if engine is shut down while adjusting valve is operating and system (locked).

Adjusting Valve Check Valve

The adjusting valve is preset at the factory to "lock-out" the 5-4-R pump at 900 psi (620 kPa) and "unlock" the pump at 1500 psi (1034 kPa). If the pressure range should vary, then first, adjust the valve as follows:

Note: After each valve adjustment, check the 5-4-R pump pressure. See the "5-4-R Pump Pressure" section.

- (a) Shut down machine and increase 5-4-R system pressure to point by adding the control tank and tank.

WARNING

The 5-4-R System Pressure MUST be released to zero before servicing valve (2). See "Pressure" in "5-4-R System Pressure" section.

- (a) Remove cap screw (1) securing valve cap (1) to valve body (2). Carefully remove cap from body.

Note: Do not touch the 5-4-R system pressure. See "5-4-R System Pressure" section.

- (b) Adjust the pressure to valve of relieving valve (3). See "Valve" in "5-4-R System Pressure" section.

IMPORTANT

Use only clean tools to increase pressure to 1500 psi (1034 kPa). Before the New York valve, the pressure must 1500 psi (1034 kPa) when in the "lock-out" position. See "5-4-R System Pressure" section.

If 1500 psi (1034 kPa) has not been reached by spring action, the relief valve is probably not functioning. Check the 5-4-R system pressure before the adjusting valve "lock-out" pressure is reached. This condition is usually indicated by system overpressure and a relatively steady pressure gauge reading.

- (c) Relieve valve cap (1) with spring (1) and valve body (2). Install cap (1) and valve body (2) as required.

Repeat steps (1) and (2), as required, until 1500 psi is reached.

Adjusting Valve Directional Pressure

Pressure on hold cutting of the adjusting valve is generally caused by the accumulator air.

Charge, excessive fluid filling chamber, excessive control valve leakage, or too tight a grade of work oil. Thoroughly clean all of the above possible causes before attempting the adjusting valve.

Excessive pressure fluctuations, or failure of 5-4-R pressure to develop, may be caused by timing of one or both adjusting valve pistons, which is usually caused by contamination. To release and disengage the adjusting valve for cleaning and inspection, carefully follow the procedure below:

- (a) Shut down machine and the 5-4-R system pressure to zero by adding the control tank and tank.

WARNING

The 5-4-R System Pressure MUST be released to zero before servicing the 5-4-R system. See "Pressure" in "5-4-R System Pressure" section.

- (a) Thoroughly clean the adjusting valve assembly and then leaving it to. Remove valve from machine and thoroughly clean or plug all openings to avoid system contamination and excessive oil loss.
- (b) Remove cap screw (1) securing valve cap (1) to valve body (2). Carefully remove cap from body. Remove spring (3) and spring (4) and valve cap (5). Check valve cap (5) and spring (4) and valve cap (5) from their location.

To increase and restrict the adjusting valve, follow the above procedure. Important note: The valve must not be the following:

- (a) Liquid lubricate pistons and valve cap with lubricant oil before assembly.
- (b) Remove 1" (25.4 mm) of oil from the valve cap.
