Structures are strongly differentiated in shape. They also have the following features: the first structure is a special, suspended, 1-branch structure for primary branching that is 100% male. 1-branch structures have the highest biomass, called the mainstem. The main stem may also contain other types of structures, e.g., secondary branches, tertiary branches, quaternary branches, etc., which are smaller and have a specific shape. The structures are arranged along the main stem, and the size of each structure is determined by the number of mainstem segments. 1-branch structures are the most common, followed by 2-branch structures, and then 3-branch structures, etc. The structures are arranged along the main stem, and the size of each structure is determined by the number of mainstem segments. 1-branch structures are the most common, followed by 2-branch structures, and then 3-branch structures, etc.

Managers are identified by the letter code letters as follows: Managers of the Eastern Division (E), Western Division (W), and Southern Division (S). The numbers 1 through 10 indicate the division of responsibility for each manager. For example, E10 would indicate the manager of the Eastern Division who is responsible for the 10th division.
